Description
-------------

Aluminum and glass lamp, designed by Achille and Pier Giacomo Castiglioni, created in 1962, Ghent model dating from the 70s. The Taccia lamp is the result of work essentially based on the reflection of light. It is an iconic piece of the postmodern period. The light is diffused without glare thanks to a flat cup that floats above a column, an emblematic and atypical shape to the touch (the latter hiding a light bulb within it). A transparent Murano glass cup connects the reflector to the base, allowing a 360° rotation of the light. You can direct the light up, down, right or left, simply by rotating the bell. In perfect condition
