Description

Walnut wood table with wrought iron fasteners. 18th century. Table with a smooth, rectangular top resting on legs that follow, in a simplified manner, the most common examples of Baroque known as "lyre legs," and which are attached by means of straight wrought iron fasteners. The influence of 17th-century models is common in the following century, although there is a preference for softening the curves and tending towards straight lines due to the influence of neoclassicism. Dimensions: 151x93x75 cm
