Description

Pug Robby, the robot's alternate name, was given for an unknown reason. The official name is "Piston Action Robot "with Remote Control Made in Japan in the late 1950s by TN (Nomura). This relatively small Pug was made in several color variations. The light blue and gold with the two horizontal antennas are supposedly the rarest This grey variant is also a rarely seen . The robot is made of tin and battery operated. Powered by a remote control that requires two C batteries. In action, the robot moves forward with light-up and pumping pistons. The condition is good; it has replacement hands and the dome top clip is broken and therefore does not hold the dome too tightly. The perfect remote control without corrosion and in working order. Lights up but moves very smoothly. The robot comes with its
