Description

Rare Russian icon depicting Saint Theodore, Prince of Smolensk and Yaroslavl (center), accompanied by his two sons Princes Constantine (right) and David (left). This exquisite icon comes from the "Golden Ring" in the Moscow region and dates from the first half of the 18th century, circa 1700/1740. It is made in tempera (paint based on natural pigments and egg yolk). The chromatic range is rich and warm in ochre tones. Born around 1240 and died in 1299, Prince Theodore (also spelled Fyodor or Feodor) is known for his contribution to the evangelization of part of the territories then controlled by the Golden Horde. He became a monk at the end of his life and is depicted here wearing the skhima--a type of robe worn by monks. He was canonized in 1467. His sons, saints Constantine
