Description

Table with fork braces. Walnut wood, wrought iron. Spain, 17th century. Table made of carved and turned walnut wood with four A-shaped legs, two wrought iron hairpin fasteners and drawers on both fronts (four in total) decorated with plant-themed carvings. The legs have a type of turning known as "lentil", with different types of discs depending on their width, creating a symmetrical composition, and placed above and below a simple cylindrical heel. The jambs have been carved with simplified plant shapes, and the fasteners have decoration of discs and balustrade shapes. The drawers are interspersed with "S"-shaped protruding pieces and have oval handles, and the sides have simple geometric carvings. Compare, for example, the walnut table with disc legs dating from the 17th century that is
