Description

French School 19th Century Portrait of a young man Signed (signature not deciphered) on the lower right Pencil, black chalk and heightenings of white and red chalks on paper Oval view 36 x 28 cm Framed under glass : 46 x 37 cm The delicacy of this portrait is typical of the golden age of portraiture in the 19th century. Precisely at a time when graphic art was competing with photography and had to outdo itself. It was above all in the search for a psychological evocation of the sitter's character that the draughtsmen distinguished themselves, as can be seen here. There's a real sense of life here, and it's particularly touching. For the moment, it has not been possible to decipher the signature, which indicates a particularly talented artist
