18th Century,

Pair of Italian Rococo Carved Giltwood

Benches Measures:

cm W 114 x H 52 x D 52. Seat height 43 cm

This

elegant pair of two-seater benches was built in the second half of the 18th century in Rome, Italy. The structure, in richly carved and gilded wood, has the characteristics of the Baroque period.

The band

under the seat has a mixed profile and is carved with rocaïlle motifs and rich floral decoration in relief in the central part. The four legs, curved and turned, have on the uprights the same carvings and in the terminal part of the foot emerges a scroll. The rear uprights, carved with curled end, are higher than the seat, in order to slender the image of the benches vertically.

The seat is lined with velvet from a later period.

These benches can be exhibited in pairs or individually in entrances or corridors, in living rooms and studios or in a room at the foot of the bed. They can also be placed below large paintings. Very decorative, bright and graceful, they are suitable both in contexts characterized by antique and modern furniture.
