Description

A true masterpiece of 19th-century craftsmanship, this important wrought iron bouquet of Saint-Éloi embodies the know-how and devotion of a master farrier at the end of his career as a Compagnon du Devoir. Traditionally hung at the entrance to a forge or workshop, this exceptional piece demonstrates remarkable mastery of techniques, such as riveting and welding, illustrating the craftsman's expertise. Rich in symbolism, the bouquet features delicate, elegantly knotted laurel garlands, stylized horseshoes, and oak leaves, all culminating in the figure of Saint Eligius, the revered patron saint of blacksmiths, farriers, and metalworkers, holding his hammer and crozier. A rare and authentic work of art, this piece will delight lovers of equestrian heritage and bring a striking touch to a
