Description

Quality craftsmanship from a 19th century coppersmith, the bottom is reinforced by a riveted wrought iron strapping. As a garden utensil, copper is not only naturally resistant to corrosion, but it also has antimicrobial properties. This watering can is a testament to quality 19th century craftsmanship for a utilitarian object which, through its manufacture, was intended to last while being aesthetic. POSSIBILITY OF SHIPPING, careful reinforced packaging, registered with signature, insurance and tracking on the internet by its number (flat rate shipping costs).
