

PROANTIC

LE PLUS BEAU CATALOGUE D'ANTIQUITES

Talismanic Flask From The Islamic Period, Middle East 700 To 900 Ad

550 EUR

Period : Before 16th century

Condition : Etat d'usage

Material : Glass

Width : 2,2 cm

Height : 7,7 cm

Description

Talismanic vial with a pyramidal body ending in a point, topped with a neck constricted at the base, animated by a circular outgrowth. The opening ends with hemmed lips, tightened towards the inside. The whole reveals a balanced and delicate shape, it was designed as much for aesthetics as for portability. Blown glass with magnificent multicolored iridescence. Small old chip at the end of the body. The whole in good general condition of conservation (see photos). Islamic period, Middle East, 700-900 AD. Dimensions: 7.7x2.2 (presented on an old 19th century base, custom-made covered with red felt). Provenance: old French collection, Millon auction, Paris. Sold with certificate of authenticity from the expert Serge Reynes. Guarantee of origin and period. In the medieval

Dealer

GALERIE OCARINA

Art précolombien, Archéologie, Arts premiers

Mobile : 0630229738

15 grand rue

Issigeac 24560

Islamic world, iridescent glass vials were commonly used to store elixirs, scented oils, or remedies with prophylactic properties. Their small size and refined beauty suggest personal or ritual use, often associated with travel or caravan trade. The presence of a circular protrusion at the neck could indicate a suspension system, allowing the object to be worn as a pendant or attached to a belt or travel bag. * Careful packaging * Shipping costs on request.