Description

Two watercolor engravings representing the elements of water and fire. In Paris, Chez Dannecon, rue St Avoye, n° 155. Note some stains and browning. Under the engraving Fire is noted: "The Persians, the Indians, the Greeks & revered this element as a God that the Romans named Vulcan", Under that of Water: "She is the queen of the elements as sometimes absorbing the Earth and extinguishing fire." These two poetic explanations complement each other and form a very beautiful set of two fine old engravings. Empire period, circa 1800. Antique gilt wood frame with some of restorations.
