(1911). Folklore, legends, tales, traditional painting and especially Moscow, which is for him the origin of the Russian soul, deeply mark his work. Kandinsky seeks a painting that corresponds to what he calls "the inner necessity" and that appeals to synesthesia around music and its relationship to colors. Kandinsky remains in search of a pure art that reflects the powers of color and symbolist, expressionist form. Herald of a non-figurative painting imbued with spirituality, he perpetually seeks the new harmony of art.
