Description

This set of four chairs, dating from the first part of the 19th century, is a remarkable example of Directoire period country furniture. Made from cherry wood, these chairs combine elegance and simplicity, characteristics of the Directoire style. Each chair has an openwork, flared back, crowned by two cylindrical elements. A decorative rosette adorns the center of the back, adding a touch of refinement. The straw seats, typical of rural furniture, offer both comfort and authenticity. The chairs rest on four straight legs, joined by braces, ensuring increased stability and durability. This robust design is a testament to the craftsmanship of the time. These cherry wood Directoire chairs are not only pieces of furniture, but also witnesses to a bygone era, reflecting the taste and know-how of early 19th century
