Description

This Edwardian-era keeper ring, crafted in 1912-1913, is a beautiful piece of history and elegance. Made from 18-carat gold and hallmarked in Chester, this ring reflects the refined craftsmanship and style of the early 20th century. At 6.9 grams, it has a substantial weight, indicating its quality and durability. The ring is designed in a wide band style, which was popular during the Edwardian period, offering both a bold appearance and comfortable wear. The size is L½, which is a common ring size, making it suitable for many wearers. Keeper rings were traditionally used to protect more delicate rings from slipping off, but over time, they have become cherished as standalone pieces due to their distinctive style. This ring is not only an exquisite piece of jewelry but also a slice of
