Description

Antique Opticians box set of test lenses, circa 1900. In 1845, Emil Busch inherited the family-owned optical instrument company "Optische Anstalt Rathenow" founded in 1801. In 1852 he started to produce cameras. In 1872 the company changed its name to "Emil Busch AG". Busch used Zeiss lenses for its lenses. In 1896, the city of Rathenow, where the company had its headquarters, was one of the most important centres for the optical industry in Germany. In 1927, Zeiss acquired a majority stake in Emil Busch AG. Emil Busch stopped producing lenses and continued only the production of cameras. At the end of World War II, the company was destroyed. The box built in oak wood is in excellent condition with functional closing hooks. Inside, the upper part is covered with a red satin
