Description

In a seated position, here is a pair of Magots trembleuses in polychrome biscuit in neutral tones, for the woman it is the fan which is mobile and which moves, for the man it is the hand. Indeed, these two parts of the bodies are detached from the rest of the body and fixed by a suspended rod allowing this effect of movement. These trembling figures were very useful in Japan to prevent the first tremors of the so frequent earthquakes. Shipping in France and internationally, contact me for the terms
