his father and his brother Andrea worked. Andrea Pozzo established his own workshop at the Buen Retiro Palace in Madrid during the reign of King Carlos III. In 1743, Horace Walpole commissioned William Kent to produce a cabinet to house a collection of miniature ivories of classical theme that he had purchased from Pozzo during his Grand Tour! He was very proud of his cabinet (now in the Victoria and Albert Museum) which, like the German Wunderkammers, demonstrated his wealth, modernity and good taste. Another set of ivory intaglios by Pozzo is at Castle Howard from Henry Howard, 4th Earl of Carlisle. Our collection is similar; the extremely fine facial features detailing the individual characteristics of each of the emperors, the unusual undercut of the neck, which undulates back and forth, and the incised text with the name of each character in Latin are typical of Pozzo's work.
