Description

Elegant hammered copper pencil case, representative of the Arts and Crafts movement of the early 20th century. This artistic movement, born in reaction to industrialization, advocated a return to craftsmanship and quality materials. The pencil case features regular hammering, typical of workshops influenced by William Morris and the Roycroft Community. Its clean and functional design reflects the aesthetic principles of the time, combining utility and beauty. This type of object, often handmade, was intended for a clientele who appreciated everyday objects transformed into pieces of art.
