Description

Wine press. Wood, metal. Spain, circa 1800.

Wooden grape juice press with two screws on the sides to manually move the flat part of the press located on top, which also has a piece to insert into a container to hold the fruit. Also note the crossbars and feet for transport. This type of agricultural machinery was very widespread in the past, although they are still few in number, as they have been replaced by technological advances that have taken place, especially after the Industrial Revolution. They were used both in monasteries and in other centers where grapes were pressed to produce wine and other beverages. - Dimensions: 180x270x305 cm
