Description

Pinnule diving level by Jules Lefebvre et Cie - Height 19 cm, length 24 cm - Circa 1875
SDC25CLI002 Sold with a handcrafted solid wood stand, excellent presentation for a collection The device was used by surveyors for field operations. Like many surveying instruments, it is placed on a three-pronged oak stand or on a simple stake. Sighting is done by aligning three elements: the narrow hole of the first small brass plate or pinnule, the crossed reticle of the other pinnule parallel to the previous one and a point on a staff which is placed at a certain distance. This is an application of the phenomenon of rectilinear propagation of light. Diving spirit level with a beautiful handcrafted wooden stand Used in the 19th century, for military engineers, architects and other trades,
