Description

French School of the 19th century, circa 1880
Presumed view of the ruins of the Court of Auditors in Paris
Oil on canvas 55 x 38 cm
Good condition - usual restorations - two small chips of material are noted
This landscape of ruins certainly represents the Court of Auditors of Paris, destroyed by a fire during the events of the Commune in 1871. The scene is bathed in a soft light which penetrates through the stone arches and vaults, creating a contrast between the shadow of the walls and the clarity of the exposed areas. The green and dense vegetation grows through the rubble, symbolizing renewal and nature reclaiming its rights. Its presence leads us to believe that the painter ventured into this forgotten place in the 1880s-1890s. The ruins of the palace remained in this state until 1897, when
