Description

Persian rug from the Yalamé tribe, hand-woven around 1960 in the Chahar Mahal region, near Isfahan, during the time of the Shah of Iran. This exceptional piece embodies all the refinement of Iranian tribal know-how, passed down from generation to generation. Made of high-quality Kork wool on a cotton weft, this rug has a density of approximately 8,000 knots per square decimeter, a sign of precise and mastered knotting. The soft and silky Kork wool allows for optimal absorption of natural dyes, giving the colors a lasting and deep brilliance. Its typically Yalamé decoration consists of diamond-shaped medallions aligned in the center, accompanied by symbolic geometric motifs (stars, small diamonds, abstract figures), all framed by multiple richly decorated borders. composition is symmetrical, balanced, and deliberately devoid of floral or figurative elements, faithful to the tribal aesthetic. The palette is distinguished by its harmonious contrasts: madder red, indigo, ivory, olive green, saffron yellow and rust orange, produced using traditional natural dyes. Dimensions: 350 x 253 cm
