Description

Large impressionist canvas from the end of the 19th century or the beginning of 1900, which represents a pleasant animated scene in front of a large building, with a couple who are apparently picking up nuts ... in the background we can also see a mother carrying her child as well as 3 women in front of a wash house ... The work is signed lower right but the signature is only visible in raking light "H.Baudon" / see detail 13: It is clearly the work of an artist who was influenced by Corot and who certainly knows the first French works of Camille Pissarro ... note: this is the kind of painting that would deserve research because its author is perhaps an artist who died prematurely or fell into oblivion (like many at that time): the framer's stamp on the back designates the house "Fénoglio Frères" active in
