Description

Extendable folding table. Walnut and walnut root. 19th century. Dining table extendable up to three meters, called a book table because of its folding method. The turned baluster-shaped legs are topped with metal casters that allow the piece to be moved. It was made by combining walnut wood and walnut root wood, leaving the striking grain of this type of material visible. The piece of furniture is reminiscent, in some details, of Victorian examples from Northern Europe. -
