Description

At the turn of the last centuries, it was customary to retain customers in department stores to offer a gift for the purchase, for example, of an additional pair of stockings. Thus, if one accepted the offer, one often left with a plate of slip, or two or three depending on the importance of the purchase. This is why we find plates of slip in somewhat disparate styles in old houses, two with strawberry decorations, one with dahlias and then with roses, all arriving according to the desires of the stockings... It is therefore rarer to find a series of several as proposed here with the model of black grape which is purple as everyone knows accompanied by vine leaves, and as always in a harmony flattering to the eyes when it comes to slip. From the end of the 19th century or beginning of the 20th century. Shipping in France
