paintings presented date from this period. He returned to France in 1948 and died in 1955. His works are featured in the collection of the Musée d'Art Moderne in Paris, among others. This particular portrait may well have belonged to the family collection, as a large portion of his works were auctioned some time ago. Each of them was of particularly remarkable quality. It is believed that Malherbe may have kept some of the works and taken them from New York upon his return to his homeland for his own collection.
