Description

Very beautiful Louis XIII wardrobe from the end of the 17th century - beginning of the 18th century, in solid walnut and composed of three superimposed parts. The lower part rests on four ball feet of a large diameter, they are surmounted by a strong molding. This part opens on the front by a large transverse drawer equipped with two wrought iron pull handles and a lock using the same key as the two doors. It is framed by two small consoles with foliate decoration. A molding work allows to hold the central part when it is positioned. The second part opens by two large leaves each divided into three panels decorated with strong diamond points and framed by thick moldings. Its two sides are each decorated with two equal parts composed of thick panels in flat band and contained in frames with strong moldings. They are also separated by an entablature rod. The interior is equipped with three shelves, the lock works perfectly, the left door closes by means of two pulls (see photo). The third part composed of the pediment and the cornice covers the other two parts. Our piece of furniture is in remarkable condition, of high quality wood and a luminous patina. Note a slight wear on the left rear corner of the cornice (see last photo). Truly exceptional piece of furniture and of high quality of execution.
