London, he was appointed official painter of the Navy on September 27, 1900. On July 10, 1893, in Paris 9th, he married Philippe Marie Louise Renée Charbonnier, born on April 26, 1870 in Paris 2nd to Joseph Alexandre Chabonnier, a man of letters, and Marie-Louise Gigault de la Bédollière, and died June 11, 1957 in Concarneau. He settled in Concarneau in 1903, establishing himself as the "painter par excellence of the markets and ports of Brittany." He chaired the committee of the Fête des Filets Bleus and was an ardent defender of the ramparts of the walled city. He devoted himself entirely to painting. His house, the famous villa Ty Ker Moor, became a meeting place for the "painters of Concarneau." He painted markets, fairs, and the return from fishing[1]. He was notably a friend of the artist couple Emmy Leuze-Hirschfeld and Emil-Benediktoff Hirschfeld[2]. Painter of silhouettes, he sketched women in headdresses, children. He was a favorite painter of lovers, scenes of daily life and picturesque scenes. The artist represented Brittany extensively; he remains one of the most representative painters of the "Concarneau group". He produced a number of color etchings printed by Eugène Delâtre and inspired by the maritime world[3]. Knighted by decree of May 16, 1910, he was promoted to officer of the Legion of Honor on February 28, 1924. Owner of a workshop on the top floor of the private mansion at 93 rue Ampère, he died on August 11, 1924 at his home at 110 boulevard Pereire in Paris 17th and is buried in the Père-Lachaise cemetery.
