father, François-Auguste-Maurice, modernized and embellished the Château de Vincy, their family residence, collaborating with the Genevan sculptor Jean Jaquet for the interior decoration and the development of a French garden. The château also served as a refuge for French royalists during the revolution. The Vasserot de Vincy family maintained ties with influential figures, including the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, with whom François-Auguste-Maurice corresponded to promote his wines on the British market.
