Description

Rococo style display table from the end of the 19th century. Carved in rocaille and completely gilded, it has four Louis XV legs that support a top in a structure of wavy and carved frames that accommodate beveled and engraved glass, both in the top and in the bands, where the glass doors open to act as support shelves; inside, red velvet lining. This type of table was born at the end of the 19th century, they are functional furnishings, mainly used to contain bottles and glasses for bars or collections of objects.
