Description

This opaline vase with a flared neck, also called a hyacinth vase, has the particularity of being made in a very rare forget-me-not blue color with a "grain of rice" appearance. In order to obtain this semi-transparency of "grain of rice", an original process was necessary involving tin oxide and calcined bones. This is why traces of residue can always be found in the opaline on closer inspection. Shipping in France and internationally, contact me for details
