Description

This beautiful porcelain vase is provided with the most beautiful of decorations, in an explosion of colors, the artist painted on the front a bouquet of polychrome flowers. In the tradition of the greatest flower painters, he knew how to harmonize the hues and the various flowers that he used for his composition, they are all painted with realism and delicacy to the point that one could believe them natural. The fleshy peonies rub shoulders with blooming roses, some fuchsias and bindweeds complete this composition. On the reverse a more sober bouquet made up of poppies rises towards the neck, a few small flowering twigs thrown here and there complete the ornamentation of this vase. The widely flared neck as well as the base are highlighted with blue and gold threads Period mid-19th century. Height
