Description

This mid-18th century Tuscan consolle, belonging to the Louis XV period, is a piece of furniture of great elegance. Expertly crafted from fine pine wood, it was carved and gilded with extreme care, giving the piece a refined appearance. The legs of this consolle are arched in the shape of a lyre and feature complex plant weavings, giving the piece of furniture an aesthetically fascinating appearance. The consolle top is made of splendid curved Bardiglio marble, which has been worked and polished with wax to give brilliance. The edge of the top is finely finished with an elegant owl's beak pattern, adding a further touch of sophistication to the entire piece. This piece of furniture adapts perfectly to environments of great taste and tradition, helping to create a classic and
