A superb 17th century French old-master oil-on-canvas depicting an Allegory of the Arts. An allegory is a painting whose subject has hidden meaning - in this attractive work we can see a cherub surrounded by objects relating to the arts such as books, an artist's palette and astronomy equipment. Invariably allegorical paintings of this period depict a range of creative tools and often indications of academic appreciation. This is an extremely beautiful painting. Condition report: The painting has had historical restoration and has also been lined, most likely circa 1850. There are some age-related marks and tiny paint surface abrasions in a few places and evidence of old small retouching. The paint surface is stable and clean with excellent tonality and colour preservation and the canvas is in good tension. The later early 19th century French gilt frame is offered as a gift. See notes below regarding frames.
