Description

Polychrome porcelain magot in the Meissen chinoiserie style (possibly Samson Manufactory), representing an Asian figure seated cross-legged, hands outstretched in front, in a garment richly embroidered with colorful flowers, head (and tongue) and hands movable, Ovington Bro's* (New York) mark inside, early 20th century. This magot is in good condition, good quality. It is very decorative. Signature inside. Note: micro-scratches and light wear of time, see photos. * In the mid-1800s, the Ovington brothers opened a shop on Fulton Street in New York and sold fine porcelain imported from famous European manufacturers such as Sèvres and Minton. In 1883, a fire destroyed the store and less than a year later, the brothers opened a six-story department store in Manhattan. The last
