Description

Wooden sculpture "Chicken" - Early 1900s

The sculpture represents a large hen carved in wood, made with great craftsmanship.

The work shows extraordinary attention to detail, especially in the plumage, which has been sculpted with precision to recreate the effect of individual feathers.

The crest and wattle are worked with a hammered texture that adds depth and realism to the figure. The wood used has a warm and natural finish that enhances the grain, giving an elegant and rustic look at the same time.

The dimensions are quite large, it is 45.5 cm high, which makes it a decorative piece with an impact, perfect for rustic, country or shabby chic environments.

The hen is often a symbol of fertility, motherhood and protection.

In rural cultures, it represents abundance and domestic life. In some traditions it is also associated with the cyclical nature of life, thanks to its ability to lay eggs regularly.
