Description

Bronze with medal patina by Émile Carlier (1849-1927), dating from the early 20th century. This work depicts a Zouave soldier playing a trumpet, with a rifle slung over his shoulder. Depicted in the heat of the action, the soldier wears the traditional Zouave uniform, characterized by baggy trousers and a short jacket. The sculpture rests on a base evoking rocky terrain, adding a realistic touch to the scene. This piece illustrates not only historical military art, but also Émile Carlier's attention to detail and artistic expertise. Émile Joseph Carlier (1849-1927) was a French sculptor who joined the studio of the sculptor Lecaron in 1864 and then entered the École des Beaux-Arts in the studio of Jules Cavelier in 1869. In 1874, he made his debut at the Salon and exhibited there
