Description

Portrait of a lady by Henri François Riesner (1767-1828), attributed. This masterfully portrait of a noblewoman created in the early 19th century and attributed to the French portraitist Henri François Riesner (1767-1828). Son of a famous cabinetmaker to Louis XV and Louis XVI, he became a pupil of Vestier, Vincent and some say David. After exhibiting some works at the Salon in 1793, he became involved in the Revolution, a period that saw his family ruined. He returned to portrait painting and notably painted Napoleon. He exhibited at the Salon until 1816 when he left for Russia, working there for 7 years, painting Emperor Alexander at that time. Back in France, he exhibited again, and notably was the uncle of Eugène Delacroix. The museums of Moscow, Leningrad, Versailles, among others,
