Description

Antique sitar made in the 70s. The instrument is in good condition, tuned for playing with its main strings and the sympathetic strings. This sitar has the particularity of having a large calabash like that of the male tampoora. It has no slots and the neck is very straight. At the back of the neck, there is the trace of a support for a resonator which is no longer present. In short, a small price for a playable sitar from this period.
