Description

Cast iron inkwell dating from the 1950s. Its solid base features a square base topped with a cylindrical fluted shaft, evoking the aesthetic of antique columns. This design choice reflects a classic reference common in office objects of this period. The inkwell is accompanied by a glass bottle for the ink, fitted with a manufacturer's label with gold patterns on a black and red background. Patina and visible signs of wear, testifying to its use. Provenance: the previous owner told us that it had belonged to his grandfather who was an architect
Height: 5cm without the bottle / 9cm with
Base width: 9cm
