British brands: Aston Martin and Lagonda, Rolls-Royce and Bentley, Jaguar & Daimler, Vauxhall Motors and Rover, Land Rover and Range Rover as well as some MG and Mini models have been upholstered with the leathers of the saddler who is a reference. A thick leather which also adorns the interiors of foreign manufacturers such as Ferrari, Maserati, Lincoln, Nissan and Honda. From the automotive sector, the brand also passes through aeronautics by equipping the seats of the "Supermarine" Spitfire fighter planes during the Second World War. Connolly leather has acquired such importance in the world of luxury travel beyond cars, such as private jets and yachts, that it has been selected for large-scale projects such as the Concorde and the Queen Elizabeth ocean liner.
