Description

The original, also in plaster, which served as a model for our sculpture is signed Poli, family name of a famous Italian sculptor and dealer in plaster decorations active in Paris during the First Empire. Housed at the MET Museum in New York, in an alcove of a wood paneling, this original could have been commissioned by Joséphine de Beauharnais, although this is not certain. Our plaster sculpture could date from the same century as the original on which it is modeled. The whole, in good condition, is made of coated plaster. The sculpture may represent Hebe, daughter of Zeus and Hera, wife of Heracles and goddess of Youth, Forgiveness, Light, and Immortality. Her contrapposto--the swaying hips for which ancient sculptors are famous--emphasizes the folds of her chiton
