Description

Louis XVI clock in blue Turquin marble and finely chiseled and gilded bronzes. Triangular in shape, the molded base rests on spinning top feet and receives a beautiful bronze ornamentation decorated with scrapers, garlands, scrolls and falling foliage and flowers and in the center, a bas-relief frieze of cupids hunting the wild boar. The enameled dial repeats this floral decoration. At the damping, a figure of Venus holds in her hand a dove that a winged cupid tries to steal from her. The period movement, with wire, strikes the hours and half-hours. Work of the Louis XVI period from the last quarter of the 18th century. Revised, in perfect working order. A similar model is reproduced on page 246 of "The Encyclopedia of the French Pendulum Clock from the Middle Ages to the 20th Century", by
