Description

Hand-knotted tribal Persian rug, made in the Malayer region (between Hamadan and Isfahan) during the first half of the 20th century. The central field features an elegant geometric medallion, surrounded by a dense array of stylized floral motifs and diamond-shaped rosettes, typical of the local decorative tradition. The well-balanced main border displays floral and geometric elements on a deep blue background, framed by two secondary guard borders. The colour palette - red, blue, pink, ivory and black - remains vivid and bright, despite the pronounced central wear, which gives the piece a beautifully aged and authentic appearance. The pile is made of hand-spun wool, knotted on cotton warp and weft, using the asymmetrical knot typical of the region. Although worn in the centre,
