Description

Pastel on paper, signed lower left, depicting a light-filled rural scene: a stone house under a slate roof, typical of the French countryside, in a peaceful and luminous atmosphere. The line is precise, the composition balanced, and the tones perfectly mastered. The work is presented under glass in its original antique frame, a classic and conservative mounting for pastels in order to preserve the pigments from dust and humidity. Gabriel de Cool (1854-1930), a student of Jules Lefebvre, exhibited regularly at the Salon des Artistes Français from 1880, where he was awarded a 3rd class medal in 1889. He specialized in genre scenes, portraits, and landscapes, with a style that is both sensitive and rigorous. His pastels are rarer than his oils, and highly sought after for their freshness and finesse
