organizations in modern Japan. Dimensions: 103 x 8 x 8 cm. Blade length: 69.2 cm. Curvature (sori): 1.8 cm. Weight: 630 g. Notes: At the end of the Muromachi period, the country was divided between the Tokugawa and Toyotomi factions, resulting in many conflicts. As a result, the demand for Japanese swords increased, and many were produced. Although unsigned, this work has been appraised by the Japanese Sword Museum as a Sue-Seki of the Old Mino School. Sue-Seki blades are known for their excellent cutting ability. This blade features a discreet gunome-midare hamon.
