of Georges Ritzleng and Louis-Philippe Kamm, he worked for a while as an advertising designer. From 1932 to 1937, he resumed his studies at the École nationale supérieure des Beaux-Arts in Paris, as a student of Lucien Simon and Jacques Beltrand, and was influenced by his fellow student Lucien Fontanarosa. He also attended the studio of Maurice Denis, whose theories would have a lasting impact on him. Back in Colmar, he moved into the family home on Rue des Marchands and opened a private painting class there. For Schwarz himself, this marked the beginning of a period of religious and secular compositions, portraits, still lifes and familiar landscapes: Colmar, Thannenkirch, Orbey, Riquewihr in particular. After the war, he was present at the Salon des Artistes Français (1949, 1951), at the Exposition de la France d'Outre-Mer (1950), at several Salons d'Automne des artistes colmariens (1951 to 1957), at the Société nationale des Beaux-Arts at the Grand Palais in Paris (1951), and finally, after a long hiatus, at the Bartholdi Museum in Colmar (1988). The same museum presented a Paul Schwarz retrospective after the artist's death in 1994, and the Colmar municipal library exhibited a selection of watercolors in 1997. From 1963 onwards, he made frequent and long stays in Morocco, where he had first visited in 1947. He brought back a large series of drawings from which he produced more elaborate canvases. The Bartholdi Museum has a series of his paintings, and the Colmar municipal library has a collection of drawings and watercolors. Sold with invoice. Painting visible at our gallery in L'Isle sur la Sorgue (France), on weekends. Free shipping for France. For abroad: on quote.
