Description
-------------

China, 19th century or earlier, very pretty wooden statue representing Chao Kung Ming, the Taoist god of wealth, in his military form, in a martial posture. He is wearing armor and seated on a throne. He holds an ingot in his left hand. Chao Kung Ming is surrounded by his attributes, the lion on which he places his right foot and the dragon whose head appears next to his left foot. On the back, the votive box is open but it has kept its contents. The wood shows traces of original lacquer and gilding. On the back, the votive box is open but it has kept its contents. Dimension: Height 23 (cm). The scale indicator on the last photograph is a small model of a lighter from a well-known brand. Good condition except for some visible losses. Slight wear and small cracks are normal and without impact. A certificate of
