Description

Old wine tables--sometimes called wine-tasting tables, vigneron tables, or guéridon à vin--are charming examples of 18th and 19th-century rural craftsmanship. These tables were used by winemakers (vignerons) during grape harvests and wine tastings. Their portability made them ideal for temporary placement in vineyards, cellars, or farmhouses. Most had tilt-top mechanisms so they could be stored easily against a wall when not in use--saving space in small rural interiors. They were typically made of regional woods like walnut, oak, or fruitwood. Sometimes they could also be adorned with floral motifs or faux finishes (like faux marble or faux leather). After nearly two centuries of use, this piece has acquired a beautiful patina resembling an abstract painting shaped by the years.
