Description

Antique Chestnut Dining Table or writing desk with two large drawers in the central band; the square-section cabriole legs, slightly curved make this solid chestnut wood table particular light. The rectangular top is made up of two planks that are disjointed in the central part and have a shaped edge with a moulding made in the solid wood and not restored. The top has a lovely patina linked to signs of use and also to small defects that the wood has suffered over time but which give it a special charm. Made entirely of solid chestnut wood, it dates back to the end of the 18th century and comes from Italian northern region.. The undertop band of the table measures 58.5 cm high from the floor, which allows a comfortable seating.
